On the occasion of the 12th ESIL Annual Conference, the Coordinating Committee of the Interest Group on “International Business and Human Rights” invites its members and other participants of the ESIL Conference to join a discussion on the role of the business sector in the funding for development.

Background & Questions

International negotiations regarding the funding for development and the Agenda Post-2015 have put in sharp focus divergent opinions in two points: which responsibilities should be beard by poor countries to realize the sustainable development goals (SDGs) and which commitments must be taken by rich countries in the context of the cooperation for sustainable development? There is nevertheless a large consensus on the role of the private sector: all stakeholders agree that non-State actors play an essential role for the economy. Even in developed countries, the private sector represents more than 90% of job creation and allows to collectivities to fund – through taxes – public services and social institutions. The 2015 Addis Ababa Action Agenda of the Third International Conference on Financing for Development and the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development agree that the private sector must be associated to States and international organizations to fund economic, environmental and social projects to achieve the objectives of the Agenda Post-2015 while respecting international agreements and standards on human rights.

Key questions addressed by the speakers will be:

- 1) What are the challenges and opportunities offered by the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development to strengthen the role of the international instruments and standards on business and human rights?
- 2) Are there any obligations of the private sector to achieve the SDGs?
- 3) Which mechanisms are available to ensure the implementation of SDGs?
